

Food Lion Manufacturer Expands Recall of Store Brand Taco Dinner Kits

April 13, 2012 at 8:08 AM EDT

Recalled Products Were Produced Under the Food Lion Store Brand Label and Sold at Bloom, Food Lion, Harveys and Reid's Stores

Public Company Information:

NYSE: DEG

The manufacturer of Food Lion store brand products announced today it has expanded its recent recall of store brand taco dinner kits.

The latest recall includes:

At Food Lion, Harveys and Reid's stores, the Food Lion store brand 12-count, hard taco dinner kit with UPC code 35826-00661, lot number ga-aug10125

At Bloom stores, the 12-count hard taco dinner kit sold under the Hannaford store brand label with UPC code 41268-17572, lot number ga-aug10125; and the hard/soft dinner kit sold under the Hannaford store brand label with UPC code 41268-17573, lot number ga-aug07125

(Previously announced) The Food Lion store brand hard/soft taco dinner kit with the UPC code 3582605118, lot number of ga-aug07125

On April 6, the company issued a voluntary recall after learning that the Food Lion-branded hard/soft taco dinner kit may have contained a milk allergen in chicken Caesar-flavored seasoning. The seasoning was not properly marked and was mistakenly included in the taco dinner kit by the manufacturer. After learning of the error, the stores immediately pulled the product from shelves. The manufacturer has since expanded the recall to include additional products with the incorrect seasoning.

The recall is being issued in an abundance of caution, and customers who may have purchased the recalled products are urged to return the items to their local Bloom, Food Lion, Harveys or Reid's store for a full refund.

Hannaford Supermarkets stores are not affected by this recall.
